Lessons from the wilderness

At the end of May and continuing through the month of June our weekly Torah portions come from the Book of “Bamidbar.” In English, the fourth book of the Torah is known as “Numbers,” but in Hebrew it is called “Bamidbar” which means “In the Wilderness.”

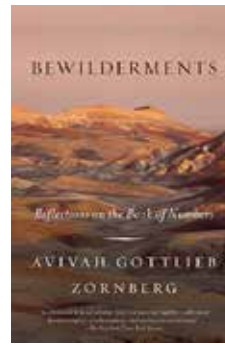

Its English name comes from the numerous censuses that take place in the book. Its Hebrew name comes from the first word of the first Torah portion. The book’s Hebrew name is far more accurate, because the essence of the book is not the counting of the Israelites. The essence is the journey from slavery to freedom and the growth that comes while traversing the wilderness.

The sages tie the word “Bamidbar” – “wilderness,” with the Hebrew word “Dibbur” – “speech.” Where there is an exile of speech when we first leave Egypt, speech plays an integral role in our time in the wilderness itself. It is here, in the wilderness, that the Israelites speak to one another more than any other book in the Torah. It is here, in the wilderness, that God speaks to the people, and the people speak to God. When we have no home, no place, no occupations, language is all we have. Our words destroy futures in the wilderness, as in the narrative of the Spies’ negative report of the Land of Israel. But, our words also give hope for building a future, as with the petitions of the daughters of Zelophehad.

Right now, we are in a wilderness unlike any we have ever been in. We are traveling from one reality to a second, but currently inhabiting a third. We do not yet have the advantage of reading the Torah: we cannot know the lessons, yet, in retrospect. We are living in this wilderness in real time. What we do know, is that this time is carrying us somewhere new: and our use of language and speech will in some way shape both the journey and the destination.

I invite you to take this time to dive deeper into this powerful book, and I am recommending three books for your libraries:

If you visit The Scroll online at <https://www.bethshalomkc.org/newsletter/> on our new website, the titles can be found on Amazon.

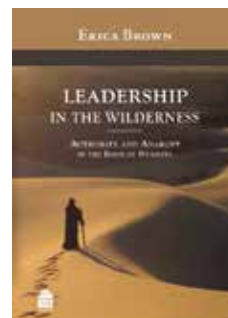

Bewilderments by Aviva Gottlieb Zornberg

This work weaves midrash, psychology and literature in a deeply emotional exploration of this complex book.

The JPS Torah Commentary: Numbers by Jacob Milgrom

This is an encyclopedic and masterful book that has biblical scholarship, archeology, and classical Jewish sources with the entire Hebrew and English Text.

Leadership in the Wilderness: Authority & Anarchy in the Book of Numbers by Erica Brown

Erica Brown is a master text teacher with an emphasis on leadership training. If you are looking for a book that connects easily to modern, real-life situations, this is a great book for the journey.

I invite you to allow this month to be one where you seek out the connections between the Torah reading and your own life. As you read, as you explore, please share with me what you discover!

Activities to do with your kids when you are staying safe at home

by JUDY JACKS BERMAN | DIRECTOR

jjb@bethshalomkc.org | 913-647-7287

Find things in your house that sink and float, use a clear bowl and guess before you put it in what will sink and what will float.

Scavenger hunts: give your child a number and they need to find that many items or an item that starts with a certain letter or a certain color.

Find things in your house that rhyme or are opposites.

Put baking soda on a plate and then with an eye dropper make drops of vinegar....what happens...

Find a favorite book and after snuggling up to read it, have your child retell you the story.

Write a story together either about what else could happen in the book or a story about something you did or would like to do.

Make a journal about this time period and what is happening. Let your child every day dictate something about these times. Something they like, something they don't like. What makes them happy and what other emotions they may be feeling. This will be interesting to look back on. Have them draw a picture each day.

Cook or bake together.

Play Simon Says without trying to trick your child.

Have dance parties. Make a family dance and video it.

Make challah together.

If your child is having a hard time understanding our new reality here are 2 excellent resources:

Meredithpolsky.com has several excellent social stories to help kids understand Covid-19 and not being in school. These social stories can be printed and read for free.

A new book has just been published and available on Amazon called "Anna and the Germ". This book is for kindergartners and older.

Look up on YouTube "The Great Realization." It is a beautiful story.

This may give you an incredible perspective on this time with your family staying safe at home.

Stay safe and healthy!

What was the point of summer camp? For me, a child who grew up in a small Western Pennsylvania town with not one Jewish kid my age (one a year older, a few several years younger), camp meant being in community with lots of other Jewish kids. All the “stuff” we did was secondary to that community, though it was magical stuff!

As of today (mid-May), many sleepaway camps have already closed for this summer, some have postponed with threat of closing, and others are waiting to announce their plans. As we face a summer without sleepaway camp, I wonder what I can do, what we can all do, to help our children who are going to miss this year’s camp experience. As I write this, I am working with other educators to plan experiences for our kids, both the campers and the older teens, the young adults who were looking forward to being counselors, unit heads, specialists. I am certain that we and other organizations will offer meaningful and fun points of contact for the children and teens in our community. I am certain that there will be “stuff” for them to do.

On the other hand, I am also certain that no matter how much we do for our kids, we are not going to be able to recreate the magic of camp for them - the magic of living daily with 15 to 50 of your closest friends, singing, dancing, hiking, eating, praying, creating – all of that “stuff” - with other Jewish kids in a place that is holier than any synagogue to them.

Our children are facing a summer away from the people and the places that recharge them emotionally and spiritually. So instead, along with searching together for as many opportunities for the younger ones to connect, for the older teens to plan, organize and lead, we must treat our children with the gentleness of spirit that caregivers offer people who are in the shock of a new trauma. This is not going to be easy, and none of us is alone. Beth Shalom and the Kansas City Jewish community are working together to help.

If you have glanced through this edition of The Scroll, or if you receive the “Daily Connect” online, you have seen the wide variety of educational, programming, and davening opportunities our clergy and staff have been able to make available to us in this new era. Please take the time to thank each of them for all that they have done so well, and so quickly.

But there’s another group who have also played a critical role in helping Congregation Beth Shalom adjust so quickly. That is your hard-working, often unrecognized, officers. They have had a number of issues to deal with recently without having all the information they would have ordinarily liked to have available. Yet on all questions they have remained calm, logical, and passionate about their love for this congregation. That is no surprise to me, for I have watched them bring the same “A” game to their work these past two years. As they reach the end of their term, I am not aware of any instance where any of these officers said they didn’t have the time to undertake any task asked of them.

Just a small list from the many examples of our officers helping make Beth Shalom a more inclusive and inviting kehillah. In addition to his duties as Treasurer, Miles Ross took it upon himself to lead a remake of our website, so we now have a smoother, more inviting set of messages available to our members and others in the community. Little did we know how important the website would be in a period with an online presence only. Dr. Ann Karty helped inspire and organize our warm, haimish “Shabbat Around the World” offerings, and worked closely with Stef Williams on ramping up a number of other programming offerings. Jason Krakow, working with Eric and Amy Schultz, led the volunteer planning for the High Holidays these past two years, and helped lead the musical services, as well as Shabbat services throughout the year. Victor Wishna worked with Hazzan, Judy Jacks Berman, and Becca Levine to increase and diversify opportunities for our youth of all ages, and also helped lead services both on Shabbat and for the holidays. And, Victor has never hesitated to bring his special talent as a writer to a number of tasks. Harold Kaseff, in addition to his duties as Board Secretary, President of the Beth Shalom Foundation, and tireless fundraiser, helped Hazzan organize and reimagine the Teffilateinu service, which so many came to enjoy monthly.

None of these officers thought they were signing up to lead the Congregation during a pandemic. But when Beth Shalom needed to adjust, each of them jumped in and did what they could to help do so. This is a group of people who obviously enjoy being with each other, and working for the benefit of us all. Please recognize and thank each of them for their extraordinary service.

I lost my father 23 years ago.

Although I am not a devout Jew,

I am a committed Jew, and saying Kaddish for him was important to me. The commandment to honor thy father and thy mother resonated very strongly with me. Saying Kaddish was a way for me to fulfill that commandment.

Little did I know at the time, how fulfilling that would become. My first day at morning minyan I felt totally lost, the service was going so fast, I didn’t know the page numbers, I was only vaguely familiar with the prayers and the tunes. I was completely overwhelmed both with the service and with grief. It didn’t take long however to feel a part of the group.

The regulars reached out to help me feel comfortable with the service and helped ease my grief. I found it a very comforting experience and those 11 months of saying Kaddish passed very quickly. I had made new friends, honored my father’s soul, and felt a very real level of comfort and accomplishment.

I felt so strongly about what I had done and how it made me feel, that it was important for me to continue coming to morning minyan. I have been coming to Tuesday morning minyan for 23 years to help make a minyan for others to say Kaddish for their loved ones. It is a small gesture on my part, but it is so important for those wishing to say Kaddish. Please make a commitment to come to either a morning or evening minyan service once a week, it’s important to support those in mourning or saying Kaddish for a loved one.

Year in review by President Mirra Goldenberg

This year was filled with so much change and excitement for the KCUSYers (almost too much to describe), so here are just a few special parts of the year that made it so unique!

We had fun and exciting programming all throughout the year for Kadimaniks and USYers alike. Our Kadimaniks had a blast at places like Urban Air, Main Event, Dave and Buster's, and so many more! USYers helped lead at Kadima events but also had their own programs every Wednesday planned by the Chapter Executive Board. Lounge nights are an essential piece of the USY experience, but KCUSYers took that to the next level with their programming this year. Some of the most memorable of those include Mah Jongg, Tie Tye Thai, Dog Night, Cookies, Cocoa and Card Games, and the list goes on and on.

But unlike the weekly programming that took place for weeks on end, KCUSY had the opportunity to host what was arguably the most special convention of the year, Winter Shabbaton! USYers joined together from all over the region to engage in meaningful USYer led programming designed by the regional board and the co-chairs. Expectations were high for this convention, but saying "they were met" is quite the understatement. Reviews by staff and USYers were undoubtedly positive and left everyone feeling somewhat at peace knowing later that this would be the last in-person convention of the year.

Even though the coronavirus pandemic tried to jump in and steal the show for our last few months of programming, it was mostly unsuccessful. With several weeks of virtual programming under our belts, we learned how to adjust to difficult circumstances. Although we weren't able to gather together in the youth lounge for the last couple months of the year, KCUSYers were able to take traditional programming meant for the rest of the year, and adapt it over zoom. Virtual board games, scavenger hunts, Just Dance!, baking, yoga, and chalk art were only a few of the many programs we had that made our last weeks of the year, functional and possible.

Although this year was nothing like anything anyone saw coming (in more ways than one), the unconditional love and support surrounding KCUSY is what made this year one for the books!
